

Data protection compliance for Toads on Roads

The following information states how Froglife will use your data following providing contact details and personal information.

- Froglife will remain the holder of all contact details and personal information.
- We will hold details of name, postal address and email
- Froglife will only use your details to contact you directly in relation to Toads on Roads; to maintain contact with individual toad crossings; to monitor the effectiveness of toad patrols; to provide support and updates; maintain appropriate insurance; and seek information on any changes of toad population through time.
- Your occasional Toads on Roads news email will contain relevant information on toad crossings, as well as information on science, news, and good practice. This might sometimes include links to products in the Toads on Roads shop, or campaigns and fundraising activities for toad crossings, tunnels and patrollers.
- Your contact details will only be accessible to third party data processors, and database managers, and will only be passed on to volunteers and organisations running toad patrols.
- Personal details will be kept in a database until you request that it is removed. If you inform us that you are no longer patrolling, your details will be archived and only deleted if you request us to remove them.
- You reserve the right to request access to, rectify, or erase records, restrict or object to processing, and the right to data portability. Froglife is only responsible for data held by ourselves, your rights in relation to data held by patrol managers are to be agreed directly with them.
- You reserve the right to lodge a complaint.
- You reserve the right to withdraw consent (if consent has been explicitly given).
- You are not under any legal obligation to provide personal data. However, we do need a certain number of personal details to enable you to register as a toad patroller.
